

Policy innovation - how to be an effective agent of change

Frustrated with the current state of affairs?
Join us for a student conference designed to provide information and opportunities for students seeking to prepare for a career in public service.

- When: Friday, February 3 to Saturday, February 4, 2017
- Who: Hosted by the Ford School of Public Policy at the University of Michigan
- Why: This free conference will provide students with information and opportunities to learn about preparing for careers in public service, including working with the federal, state or local governments, non-profit organizations as well as international organizations.
- What's included: The conference will include a policy simulation, a hands-on service project, panels with graduate students and faculty of the Ford School as well as social activities. All costs for the conference are covered by the Ford School.
- Who should attend: If you are currently freshmen or sophomore at a university* in the State of Michigan who is motivated to get a head start on learning about the many pathways into the field of public service, this conference is designed for you.
- How do I apply? Click here for a link to our application. The priority application deadline is January 1, 2017.

Be one of the 20 aspiring public leaders who is selected to participate in this conference and start building your network!